So small teams of protohominids discovered it advantageous to haul their food again to the security of the gully the place they d slept the evening before. Often cats stalked the protohominid hunters or teams out looking for seeds and roots. Rhinos and different hoofed grazers still ambled in small groups from glade to glade, to forage. Daily they wandered the exposed hillsides in small groups, searching for herbs, grasses, nuts, and fruit. Small animals became prized foods. Soon the lake turned right into a swamp and intermittently a dry woodland area the place the plants and animals of Europe mingled with these of Africa. Once again the forests of the south met those to the north in a steady belt of jungle that unfold from South Africa to India. As the African continental plate slipped north, the 2 parallel rifts in the earth s floor that stretched by East Africa started to unfold apart. Where formerly the grasses and herbs had struggled to survive below a sea of leaves, now they started to spread and dominate the panorama. Between them the ground sank and formed the panorama we know immediately—a collection of low valleys nestled between mountainous highlands on either facet. We all know what it s like, and we certainly do not wish to knock someone from seeing tits and ass. At night time, the protohominids congregated within the bushes that bordered the lakes and streams. Along the shallow lakes storks hunted crabs, hornbills caught fish, and crocodiles ate birds eggs. Every morning the sun warmed the timber and clearings and every afternoon warm rain fed the streams and lakes. Now the drenching downpours that had soaked the forests each afternoon have been a factor of the past. Though the protohominids had realized to outlive in the woodlands, now throughout the dry season they have been usually compelled to strive their luck on the treacherous savannahs of East Africa. The sunbaked savannahs of East Africa had been in ecological balance when the protohominids arrived. And when the protohominids had been thirsty they might scoop out shallow holes within the sandy gullies to get water. What did you get? The van has offered a place for avenue prostitutes to get warm and to talk; allowed us to hold our road outreach companies to a bigger variety of extra distant (suburban) strolls; and aided networking with other companies and repair suppliers, not simply in Toronto however all through the province.
